CURRENT TOPICS.

THERE WAS a very full attendance of judges on the opening day of the Trinity Sittings; as many as twenty-six sitting in the various courts. The only absentee was Mr. Justice NORTH, who was also absent on the second day, and did not sit until Thursday.

THE THIRD OF JUNE being the day appointed for commemorating the Queen's birthday, there will be no sitting in court in the Royal Courts of Justice on that day. There was a rumour that the day would also be observed as a holiday in the legal offices, but up to Thursday no order to that effect had been issued.

THE LENIENCY of the judges towards the suitor in person, and especially towards female suitors in person, appears to give encouragement for numerous frivolous applications which are as often as not applications for advice. Usually, the judge or judges listen patiently in order to be able to make some reply to the application, and, in spite of themselves, have to give some instructions in the nature of advice, as for instance, "You must apply on a motion day," or "You have come to the wrong court," but when personal or abusive or blasphemous expressions are used by the suitor in reply, patience is exhausted—and then—

THE SMALLNESS of the Guildhall list seems to show that there is at present no great tendency in commercial litigation to localize itself in the City. For the present sittings twenty-two special and eleven jury cases are set down for trial. Of course the return to the Guildhall was merely an experiment. The defective arrangements of the old sittings there, and of the subsequent sittings at the Royal Courts, had damaged the cause list, and it by no means followed that the mere revival of the trial of actions in the City would bring back the business which had been lost. It may well be that the convenience of having all causes in the High Court heard in the same building outweighs the slight advantage gained by having some heard at the Guildhall; and if in practice this is found to be so, the raison d'être of the sittings there will have vanished. It will be time enough, however, to suggest a further change when it is seen what effect the impending alteration of procedure and of circuit arrangements is likely to have upon litigation.

MEANWHILE it would be well for those who have the management of cases to be careful not to lend themselves to such a breakdown as occurred recently in the second court at the Guildhall. In Mr. Justice KENNEDY's list three cases were down for trial, and none of them proved effective. Owing to the fact of the same counsel being employed in each of the cases in Mr. Baron POLLOCK's list, it was impossible to borrow a case from him, and shortly before twelve the jury men summoned were dismissed and the judge rose for the day. Of course it is easy to make too much of such an incident, and it may be that in the present instance there were good reasons to account for the breakdown of the list. In any case it is better by having a short list to run the risk of the occasional waste of judicial time than by making it unnecessarily long to waste the time of a host of persons, clients, witnesses, and lawyers. But it is obviously incumbent upon solicitors who have cases waiting for trial to do all they can to assist the officials to draw up such a list as shall fairly provide for the business of the day, and especially to give notice where their cases are settled or are likely to be settled.

LEGISLATION by rules and orders has been frequently referred to as objectionable, but the Judicature Bill, introduced by the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords, shews, in clause 4, which has reference to officers of the Supreme Court, a further development of this practice. The general effect of that clause enables the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Treasury in matters affecting public expenditure, to make orders regulating the salaries, numbers, qualifications, duties, and attendance of officers, their holidays, sick leave, the temporary employment of substitutes, their promotion, age of retirement, and removal, and this without regard to Acts of Parliament regulating many of these subject-matters, and without in any way attempting to take into consideration, or to preserve, the rights of those who hold their offices under statutes. In short, the Bill as framed empowers the Lord Chancellor, by a simple stroke of the pen, to repeal Acts of Parliament regardless of the consequences to those who may have served for years relying on the justice of the Legislature. Apart, too, from any question of vested rights, the absence of any provision giving some preference to, and affording some consideration for, all existing officers, whether they have vested rights or not, is a conspicuous blot on this extremely drastic Bill.

WE PUBLISH elsewhere our annual list of attendances of members of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society. As usual, Mr. PENNINGTON is at the head of the list, but with a slight diminution of his last year's extraordinary record. He had 238 attendances last year, while this year he has 224. Mr. GODDEN comes next with 132 attendances, while Mr. JOHN HUNTER has 114. The above attendances of course include both meetings of the council and of committees. Taking attendances at council meetings alone, it will be seen that Mr. PENNINGTON is run very close by Mr. ADDISON, Mr. MILLS, Mr. ROSCOE, Mr. KEEN, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. WALTERS, Sir H. W. PARKER, and Sir T. PAINE. It should be borne in mind, however, that the list is not a fair representation of the interest taken in the affairs of the society by some members of the council. Illness, or the necessity for caution in abstention from overwork, may account for a largely diminished number of attendances on the part of members who are among the pillars of the council. In truth, the only correct mode of arriving at the working, as opposed to the ornamental, members is to take an average of three years' attendances. One of the most satisfactory features of the present list is the large increase in the attendances of the extraordinary members. There are this year 83 attendances as against 40 last year.

OUR INQUIRY last week as to the oldest practising country solicitor has elicited several interesting communications, with the usual result of deposing our last week's "favourite." So far the oldest country solicitor we have heard of whose name appears in this year's Law List is Mr. E. M. WARELL, of Halifax, who was admitted in Easter, 1830, and is still actively engaged in practice. He has a year's seniority over Mr. GEORGE WHITE, of Epsom, to whom we referred last week. But among solicitors whose names do not appear in the Law List as having taken out certificates for the present year we have some remarkable instances from Derbyshire and Plymouth. Mr. JOSEPH SALE, of Derby, who was admitted in Easter, 1825, is, we are informed, still living and active, while Mr. JOSEPH HALE, of Castleton, who was admitted in Trinity, 1817, and died about four years ago, practised up to his death. Mr. JOHN BAYLY, of Plymouth, was admitted in Hilary, 1826; and a correspondent who sends us his name says that "in this healthy climate there may be non-practising solicitors admitted somewhere in the first years of the present century." If there are any such veterans, we should be glad to have particulars of them. Up to the present the result of our inquiries has been to place Mr. E. M. WARELL, of Halifax (Easter, 1830), at the head of the list of country solicitors whose names appear in this year's Law List as in actual practice, with Mr. GEORGE WHITE, of Epsom (Easter, 1831), second, and Mr. J. S. ELDRIDGE, of Southampton (Trinity, 1833), third. It will be very remarkable, however, if solicitors who enjoy the benefit of a healthy country life should prove to be beaten in point of longevity by the dwellers in this smoky, foggy, unsavoury, bustling metropolis. Yet, as matters stand at present, there are at least six London solicitors in actual practice whose date of admission is prior to that of Mr. WARELL. Our country friends must look to their laurels. With regard to London solicitors, Sir H. W. PARKER kindly reminds us that in the list we published last week of London solicitors in practice admitted before 1837 we omitted the name of Mr. JOHN FOSTER ELMSLIE, of No. 11, Queen Victoria-street, who was admitted in Michaelmas, 1833. Supposing (as would seem to be the case, since we have not received any corrections) that we have properly settled Mr. CHARLES BISCHOFF as the "doyen" of the practising London solicitors, and Mr. JOHN DINGWALL as the next in seniority, we should be glad to know next what is the oldest firm in the City in the same family. We know an instance of an existing firm in the City in which there have been four generations of the family, the earliest member having been admitted in 1771. Can this be surpassed?

AN INSTANCE of the fierce light that beats upon a judgment is afforded by the remark made by Mr. Justice STIRLING in Baring v. Abingdon (1892, 2 Ch., at p. 381), that the granting of a new lease to a stranger, with the assent of the lessee, operates as a surrender of the old lease. The learned judge said nothing about the lessee giving up possession; hence, in Wallis v. Hands, Newman, Scott, and the District of Bristol Collieries Co. (41 W. R. 471) his dictum was seized on as an expression of opinion that a mere parol assent of a lessee to the granting of a new lease to a stranger operated as a surrender of the old lease. It could hardly have been supposed that Mr. Justice STIRLING intended, by an observation of the kind referred to, to express an opinion contrary to one of the most admirably reasoned judgments of one of the most distinguished judges who ever sat on the English bench—we mean the judgment of PARKE, B., in Lyon v. Reed (13 M. & W. 285); approved, moreover, by Lord ST. LEONARDS in Creagh v. Blood (3 Jo. & Lat. 133); and in the recent case Mr. Justice CHITTY stated that he had the authority of STIRLING, J., for stating that he did not, in Baring v. Abingdon, intend to express any opinion on the point whether a change of possession was necessary. Mr. Justice CHITTY has, in the recent case, most usefully and tersely stated the law on the subject, as being, in the words of POLLOCK, C.B., in Davison v. Gent (5 W. R. 229, 1 H. & N. 774), that "where a lessee assents to a lease being granted to another, and gives up his own possession to the new lessee, that is a surrender by operation of law." This proposition, as Mr. Justice CHITTY says, may be stated in either of the following ways—viz.: (1) There is no surrender by operation of law unless the old tenant gives up possession to the new tenant at or about the time of the grant of the new lease to which he assents; or (2) the change of possession is a necessary part of the consent. We venture to think, however, that he is correct in preferring the first as being the more correct form. "The foundation of the doctrine that the acceptance of a new lease by an existing tenant operates as a surrender in law is estoppel by act in pais, the law attributing the force of estoppel to certain acts of notoriety, such as livery of seisin, entry, acceptance of an estate, and the like; and the grant of a new lease to a stranger, with the tenant's assent and change of possession preceding or following the lease, bring such a case within the scope of the same doctrine, which mere oral assent would not do."

IN A CASE which we report elsewhere a divisional court (WILLS and CHARLES, JJ.) have had to consider how far a criminal conviction for an offence morally disgraceful, but not involving dishonesty or misconduct in any professional relation, is a ground for striking a solicitor off the rolls. The question is undoubtedly a difficult one. Of course mere conviction of a criminal offence is not sufficient. Everything turns on the nature of the offence. In Re A Solicitor (33 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 492) Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., sitting in the Court of Appeal, said it was obvious that, if it were to be laid down as an absolute rule that in every case of a conviction for felony striking off the rolls must follow as a matter of course, the rule would break down at once. There were, he added, some felonies which were infinitely disgraceful, but there were others which an honourable man might commit without suffering any stain to his honour. He must be punished if he did so, for the law must be vindicated, but he would not be unfit to associate with his fellow-men, or to be trusted with their property or confidence. Very similar language is used by WILLS, J., in the present case. "I quite agree that the mere fact of a man being convicted of a criminal offence, even an offence punishable with imprisonment and hard labour, is not in itself sufficient to justify his being struck off the rolls, or being even suspended from practice, because there may be cases in which, although the law has to be vindicated, there may be nothing when the matter comes to be explained which would seriously detract from the confidence which in all the ordinary relations of life, and in the ordinary business relations which a solicitor must maintain with his clients, ought to be placed in him." Thus each judge appears to think it right to look at the substance of the offence rather than at the legal punishment, and he bases the solicitor's disqualification upon either of two grounds—the offence makes him unfit to move in ordinary society, or it touches his professional reputation. As to the latter point of course there is no doubt, but the principle that conduct merely disgraceful in private life is a ground for striking a solicitor off the rolls suggests cases of difficulty. In the present instance it was objected that it would give the court jurisdiction in the event of revelations in the Divorce Court. WILLS, J., however, did not shrink from this result. "Cases," he said, "might come out, even in an investigation in the Divorce Court, which could shew that a man was wholly unfit to be a member of an honourable profession or to be entrusted with the status of one of the officers of this court." At the same time he drew the distinction that there might in such a case be no criminal offence, and though criminality is not conclusive, yet it at least calls for the investigation of the court, and so renders easy the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court. In the case in question the solicitor had been convicted of knowingly permitting premises belonging to him to be used as a brothel, and, as the court very properly considered this to be conduct of a peculiarly disgraceful kind, they had no hesitation in striking him off the rolls. Here, of course, the offence was that he trafficked in the immorality of others. Some day a more difficult question may arise, such as that hinted at above, when the immorality affects directly the person accused.

The annual dinner of the Hardwicke Society takes place next Monday at the Criterion Restaurant (6.30 p.m.). Lord Halsbury will be the guest of the evening.

An echo from the recent festivities at the Middle Temple, says the Pall Mall Gazette, still lingers. On the night when the Prince of Wales dined with his fellow Benchers, a distinguished Scotch judge and wit found himself by the side of a legal peer, who shall be nameless. The latter remarked that he envied the former the famous Advocates' Library at Edinburgh (one of the best, if not the best law library in the kingdom), adding, "We have no books in the House of Lords." "That accounts for some of your decisions," was the prompt reply.

THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE BILL.

THE Lord Chancellor's Supreme Court of Judicature Bill deals with two of the matters which were considered and reported on by the Council of Judges, the limitation of interlocutory appeals and the mode of taking evidence upon applications relating to the distribution of property.

As to the limitation of interlocutory appeals it is natural to compare the present proposals with those which were made by the judges. In the report of the Council of Judges statistics were given of the actual number of appeals from chambers. In the year 1891, it was said, there were in London 39,775 summonses before the masters, of which 3,255 were taken to the judge in chambers, 506 to the divisional courts, and 51 thence to the Court of Appeal. Of the 51 cases so brought before the Court of Appeal not more than 15 or 20 related to mere matters of practice or procedure, and no case of that kind was taken to the House of Lords. But although the number of cases in which appeals in matters of practice had been carried to several successive courts did not appear to be large, the council recommended that the opportunity of using so many stages of appeal should be taken away. Their proposals to this effect, and also with regard to interlocutory appeals generally and appeals from any inferior court or person to the High Court, were contained in resolutions 79, 80, and 81.

To take these in the order in which the respective subjects are dealt with in the Lord Chancellor's Bill, resolution 80 provided that, except in certain specified cases, there should be no appeal from any interlocutory order made by a judge in chambers or in court without leave of the judge. The excepted cases were:—(a) where the liberty of the subject or the custody of infants is concerned; (b) applications under order 14, where a judge has refused unconditional leave to defend; (c) setting aside writs for service out of the jurisdiction; (d) prohibition; (e) injunctions and receiverships before judgment; (f) charging orders; and (g) commissions. In the report it was also said that there should be no appeal at all where unconditional leave to defend had been given. As to these proposals the Bar Committee in their report of December, 1892, emphatically objected to any rule by which the leave of a judge of first instance was made necessary for an appeal, though, if such leave was required, they considered that the Court of Appeal should have power to give leave if refused by the court below. Moreover, the committee suggested that if the necessity of obtaining leave was imposed, the proper course was to state the cases in which the leave must be obtained rather than those in which it was not to be required; but no mention was made of any case of such importance as to require absolute freedom of appeal which was not included in the judges' list of exceptions. The Council of the Incorporated Law Society, on the other hand, went further than the Council of Judges. They recommended in their report that there should be an appeal from all orders of a master to a judge, but that there should be no further appeal without the leave of the judge, except in cases under order 14, where leave to defend has been refused, and in applications for a commission to examine witnesses abroad.

The Lord Chancellor's Bill follows the resolutions of the Council of Judges, but is somewhat more drastic. In two cases there will be no appeal at all—namely, where an order has been made allowing an extension of time for appealing from a judgment or order, and where an order has been made giving unconditional leave to defend. In other cases of interlocutory orders or judgments made or given by a judge, there will be no appeal except with the leave of the judge or of a judge of the Court of Appeal, except when the liberty of the subject or the custody of infants is concerned, and except in cases of granting or refusing an injunction or appointing a receiver. The principle thus adopted appears to be the true one—namely, to prohibit appeals in interlocutory matters without leave first obtained, save in specified cases of recognized importance; but as to the list of such cases opinions may differ. Those contained in the Bill are amongst the cases suggested by the Council of Judges, but others suggested by them, namely, cases under order 14, service of writ out of the jurisdiction, prohibition, charging orders, and commissions, are omitted. Doubtless it is advisable to make the list as short as possible, but we imagine that it would be well to include, as suggested by the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, cases where leave to defend under order 14 has been refused. It will be noticed that the leave to appeal, where this is required, may be given either by the judge or by a judge of the Court of Appeal. It is not stated whether this is to be in the alternative, or whether the party desiring leave to appeal, after being refused by the judge, can then have recourse to a member of the Court of Appeal. But in any event he will have the chance of submitting the matter to the higher authority, and this is a further reason for restricting as much as possible the list of cases in which an appeal will lie without leave. An application for leave to appeal is to be made ex parte or otherwise, as may be prescribed by rules of court.

As to appeals in matters of practice and procedure, the Council of Judges proposed (resolution 79) that there should be only one appeal from orders made by a judge in chambers or in court, and that in the Chancery Division this should be to the Court of Appeal as at present. In the Queen's Bench Division there was to be a court specially constituted for the purpose, consisting of not less than three judges. This suggestion has not been adopted in the Bill, and it is provided that every appeal from a judge in matters of practice and procedure shall be to the Court of Appeal, whose decision shall be final.

The remaining matter dealt with in this connection by the Council of Judges related to appeals to the High Court, and it was suggested (resolution 81) that there should be no appeal from any divisional court without the leave of that court from any judgment or order made by the court when sitting on appeal from any court or person—e.g., from a county court, revising barrister, official referee, taxing master, &c. This proposal completes the restriction on appeals from inferior courts contained in section 45 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and section 20 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, and is adopted in the present Bill with the modification that leave to appeal may be given either by the Divisional Court which has heard the appeal from the inferior court or by the Court of Appeal, and with the further provision that where leave to appeal is given the decision of the Court of Appeal is to be final. Thus the House of Lords will only be able to entertain English appeals in matters which have originated in the High Court.

The Bill, it will be observed, expressly recognizes the existing practice of appeals to divisional courts, although procedure appeals are to be taken direct to the Court of Appeal. "In all cases," it provides, "where there is a right of appeal to the High Court from any court or person, the appeal shall be heard and determined by a divisional court constituted as may be prescribed by rules of court." It would have been preferable had the appeal here also been made direct to the Court of Appeal. This would have saved one possibility of appeal, and would have been practically equivalent, with the proposed change in appeals in matters of practice and procedure, to the abolition of divisional courts. At the same time, as suggested by Mr. Justice CAYE, and approved by the Bar Committee in their report, a third division of the Court of Appeal would have to be formed. In this case the additional judges would assist the Queen's Bench Division either on circuit or in London.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society also proposed that appeals generally should be regulated according to the value of the subject-matter in dispute. Where this can be estimated in money, and the amount does not exceed £100, it was proposed that there should be no appeal from any judgment or order, whether final or interlocutory, without the leave of the judge, excepting in test cases and in cases under order 14 where leave to defend has been refused. Where the amount is between £100 and £1,000 there would be an appeal, either with the leave of the judge, or on a certificate of counsel, in the latter case security for costs being given or £20 brought into court. In cases above £1,000 the right of appeal would be unrestricted, and so, too, where the matter in dispute could not be estimated in money. These proposals, however, find no place in the present Bill.

All the above matters are dealt with in clause 1 of the Bill. Clause 3 declares that the power to make rules conferred by the Judicature Acts, 1873 to 1891, includes power to make rules for regulating the mode in which evidence of particular facts may be given on applications relating to the distribution of any fund or property, whether in court or not, and on applications upon summons for directions. Resolution 47 of the Judges' Resolutions proposed, as to the distribution of a fund or property, that the judge in person should be at liberty, in order to avoid expense and delay, to accept or allow testimony of information and belief, and such other evidence as, regard being had to the circumstances of the particular case, he should consider reasonable. And he was to exercise this discretion, without any formal application, by giving directions to the chief clerk in the particular case as to the evidence to be accepted or allowed. Under the clause in question rules will probably be made to the same effect, though it would be well to have some clearer indication of the evidence which will in general be regarded as sufficient.

The second case provided for by clause 3 deserves notice, as it seems to indicate an intention to introduce a compulsory summons for directions at the commencement of the litigation as proposed by the Council of Judges. On such a summons it would be necessary for the master to be acquainted with the facts of the case, and under the clause rules may apparently be made regulating the mode in which, for the purpose of the summons, such facts would be proved. It may be assumed that the Bill contains all the changes which it is proposed to found upon the report of the Council of Judges, and for which the sanction of the Legislature is necessary. For the changes as a whole we must wait until the draft of the new rules has been issued.

SERVICE UPON FOREIGN FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS.

In an article published in these columns rather more than two years ago (35 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 374) occasion was taken to review some of the decisions on suing and serving foreign firms, and to summarize some of the practical results of those decisions. Two of those results were there stated as follows:—"A purely foreign firm, all the partners in which reside abroad, cannot be sued as a firm. The partners must be sued individually (Western National Bank of New York v. Perez, Triana, & Co., overruling Pollexfen v. Sibson)."

"A single individual residing abroad and being a foreign subject and carrying on business in this country in the name of a firm must be sued individually in his own name (Russell v. Cambefort, overruling O'Neill v. Clason & Co.)."

Two recent cases (Grant v. Anderson, 1892, 1 Q. B. 108, and De Bernales v. New York Herald, ante, p. 404; reported on appeal ante, p. 475) appear to shew that the practice as to suing foreign firms and individuals remains as stated above, and that the new Rules of Court dealing with service upon partners have not had the effect of altering the practice so as to overrule Russell v. Cambefort and similar cases. The new code of rules as to actions by and against firms, which came into force upon the 1st of July, 1891, is contained in order 48a. Rule 1 of that order provides that "any two or more persons claiming or being liable as co-partners and carrying on business within the jurisdiction may sue or be sued in the name of the respective firms, if any, of which such persons were co-partners at the time of the accruing of the cause of action." Rule 3 provides that "where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm under rule (1), the writ shall be served either upon any one or more of the partners or at the principal place, within the jurisdiction, of the business of the partnership upon any person having at the time of service the control or management of the partnership business there; and, subject to these rules, such service shall be deemed good service upon the firm so sued, whether any of the members thereof are out of the jurisdiction or not, and no leave to issue a writ against them shall be necessary." And rule 11 provides that "any person carrying on business within the jurisdiction in a name or style other than his own name may be sued in such name or style as if it were a firm name; and, so far as the nature of the case will permit, all rules relating to proceedings against firms shall apply."

In the first-mentioned of the above recent cases, Grant v. Anderson & Co., an action brought against a Scotch firm for breach of a contract entered into in Scotland, the plaintiffs served their writ upon an agent of the defendants in London, under ord. 48a, r. 3, and the main question was whether the defendants were carrying on business within the jurisdiction. It was held by the Court of Appeal, affirming a divisional court, that they were not, and that the service of the writ must be set aside. But the Divisional Court went further, and expressed the opinion that ord. 48a, rr. 1, 3, have no application to actions against foreign firms the members of which are domiciled and resident out of the jurisdiction; Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., saying that it must have been intended in these rules "to accept the decision in Russell v. Cambefort, a decision which rested upon certain broad principles of international comity"; and WRIGHT, J., stating that that case rightly decided "that a mere rule of special procedure dealing with the technical difficulties relating to the service of partners ought not to be held to enlarge the jurisdiction of the courts." The Court of Appeal decided the case merely on the ground that the defendants were not carrying on business within the jurisdiction, and both Lord ESHER, M.R., and KAY, L.J., who heard the appeal, expressly guarded themselves from deciding "whether the decision in Russell v. Cambefort still applies under the new rules," and "whether the case of a foreign firm is within the rule."

In De Bernales v. New York Herald, to the singular history of which we have previously referred (ante, p. 418), the action was brought against the proprietor of a newspaper who was carrying on business—or, at least, maintaining an office—in England, but was himself an American subject resident in Paris, and he was sued in the name under which the newspaper was conducted—the New York Herald. The plaintiff, relying upon ord. 48a, rr. 11, 3, attempted to serve his writ at the London office of the newspaper upon some person having the control or management of the business, and failing in this attempt, came to the court for leave for substituted service by means of a registered letter sent to the office. This was allowed by the master, but his decision was reversed by KENNEDY, J., whose view was upheld by a Divisional Court. LOPES, L.J. (sitting in the Divisional Court), referred to the argument of the plaintiff's counsel as to the relation of rule 11 of order 48a to foreigners residing abroad, said, "I cannot think that the authors of this rule intended that service might be effected on an individual foreigner permanently residing abroad simply because he carried on business in this country under an assumed name, where it could not have been effected upon him if he carried on business here in his own name." The Lord Chief Justice concurred, and decided not to read a judgment which he had prepared and in which he dealt with the questions raised by Russell v. Cambefort and Grant v. Anderson.

So far the question as to the applicability of the rules of order 48a to foreign firms and individuals had not been touched by the Court of Appeal. In Grant v. Anderson, as we have seen, the decision in that court turned upon mere matter of evidence; and in De Bernales v. The New York Herald the Lords Justices took the sound common-sense view that "a plaintiff could not sue the thing sold as the person selling it," which was what the plaintiff in that case was attempting to do, by suing the proprietor of a journal in the name of his journal. They expressed no opinion upon the reasons for the judgment of the Divisional Court. That judgment, however, combined with the dicta in Grant v. Anderson, is a strong authority for the view that order 48a has not extended the right of suing and serving foreigners, whether firms or individuals, and that persons who have a cause of action against a foreigner resident abroad which they wish to prosecute before the courts of this country must have recourse to order 11, which deals with service out of the jurisdiction, and must show that their case comes under one of the heads which are there enumerated. And this view has now been taken by the Court of Appeal in the case of St. Gobain Channy and Cirey Co. v. Huyermann's Agency decided on Wednesday. The defendant was a foreigner resident abroad, and carrying on business in this country by an agent. It was accordingly sought to sue him under ord. 48a, r. 11, in the name under which his business was carried on. But the Court of Appeal held, in accordance with the opinion of the Divisional Court in the above cases, and on the principle of Russell v.

Cambefort, that rule 11 does not apply so as to allow of a writ against a foreigner in such a case.

It would no doubt be for the advantage of English traders that facilities should be given to them for suing foreign firms and individuals with whom they have contracted; but if an alteration is to be made in this respect it must be made expressly and not left to be implied from rules which prima facie apply only to methods of suing English firms. To allow the device which was attempted in De Bernales v. The New York Herald to succeed would be to give a larger power of suing a foreigner who trades here under an assumed or trade name than exists with regard to a foreigner who carries on business in his own name—in fact, to allow a technical rule of procedure to enlarge the jurisdiction of the court, a result which, as WRIGHT, J., pointed out in Grant v. Anderson, cannot have been the intention of the framers of the rules.

LEGISLATION IN PROGRESS.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE—The Supreme Court of Judicature Bill, which has been introduced by the Lord Chancellor and read a first time, is a short bill of six clauses. Clause 1, which is designed to carry out some of the recommendations of the Council of Judges as to appeals, and upon which we comment elsewhere, is in the following terms:—(1.) No appeal shall lie—(a) from an order allowing an extension of time for appealing from a judgment or order; nor except with the leave of the judge, or of a judge of the Court of Appeal (b) from any interlocutory order or judgment made or given by a judge, except where the liberty of the subject or the custody of infants is concerned, and except in cases of granting or refusing an injunction or appointing a receiver. (2.) No appeal shall lie from an order of a judge giving unconditional leave to defend an action. (3.) In matters of practice and procedure every appeal from a judge shall be to the Court of Appeal, whose decision shall be final. (4.) In all cases where there is a right of appeal to the High Court from any court or person, the appeal shall be heard and determined by a divisional court, constituted as may be prescribed by rules of court; and the determination thereof by the Divisional Court shall be final, unless leave to appeal is given by that court or by the Court of Appeal, in which case the determination by the Court of Appeal shall be final. (5.) An application for leave to appeal may be made ex parte or otherwise, as may be prescribed by rules of court. (6.) This section shall have effect notwithstanding anything in section 19 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873, or any other enactment relating to appeals contained. The object of clause 2 is to improve the procedure on appeals from quarter sessions, and to give the High Court on such appeals the same powers as it has on appeals from county courts. It provides (1) that every case stated by a court of quarter sessions on an order or summary conviction for the consideration of the High Court shall be deemed to be an appeal, and shall be heard and determined accordingly; (2) that on the hearing of an appeal from quarter sessions, the appellate court may draw any inference of fact which might have been drawn at quarter sessions, or may give or make any judgment or order which might have been then given or made, or may remit the order or conviction, and the case stated on it, with the opinion or direction of the appellate court, for rehearing and determination at quarter sessions, or may remit the case for restate-ment; (3) the appellate court is to have full power over costs both in the appellate court and at quarter sessions. Clause 3 declares that the power to make rules conferred by the Judicature Acts shall include power to make rules as to giving evidence in certain cases. Upon this we comment elsewhere. Clause 4 (on which we comment elsewhere) deals with a different matter entirely, and confers upon the Lord Chancellor power to regulate the conditions of service, and, with the concurrence of the Treasury, the salaries of all officers of the Supreme Court. The memorandum prefixed to the Bill states that the necessity for this clause arises out of the fact that doubts have recently been raised whether Orders in Council regulating the civil service apply to the legal departments. The organizations, qualifications, duties, and requirements in those departments, it is said, are so materially different from those in the ordinary branches of the civil service that great confusion would follow any such application; but, at the same time, there are recommendations in the recent report of the Royal Commission on Civil Establishments which ought not to be disregarded in the legal departments if they are thought right to be enforced in other public offices. Hence the officers of the Supreme Court are to be subject to the Lord Chancellor's regulations, as just stated, and orders based on similar principles to those recently laid down for the civil service are intended to be issued as soon as the power to make such orders is given. The words of the clause specify the following as the matters with which these regulations will deal:—(a) the salaries, numbers, qualifications, duties, and attendance of the officers of the Supreme Court; (b) their holidays, sick leave, and the temporary employment of substitutes; and (c) their promotion, age for retirement, and removal; but the concurrence of the Treasury is to be required for anything in such regulations affecting public expenditure. Orders made under the clause are to be laid before both Houses of Parliament, and are to apply to any officer of the Supreme Court, whether appointed before or after the passing of the Bill. Where, however, they prejudice existing interests, a remedy is proposed to be given by sub-clause (4), which provides as follows:—"If any person feels himself aggrieved by reason of any order under this section, he may present a petition to the Lord Chancellor stating the circumstances of the case, and asking for the compensation to which the petitioner deems himself entitled, and if the Lord Chancellor thinks the petitioner entitled to compensation, he shall transmit the petition to the Treasury, stating the grounds on which he thinks the petitioner is so entitled, and the Treasury shall have discretion to award such compensation, if any, as in their opinion is just and reasonable." Clause 5 provides for the abolition of the office of Queen's Remembrancer as from the next vacancy in that office, the duties of the office being thenceforth discharged by the senior master in the Queen's Bench Division. The clause, so the memorandum states, is introduced pursuant to undertakings frequently given in the House of Commons when the estimates have been under discussion; although, in fact, the office of Queen's Remembrancer has for a considerable number of years been virtually abolished by consolidation with that of senior master of the Supreme Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE CONSTITUTION. By A. V. DICEY, Q.C., B.C.L., Vinerian Professor of English Law, Oxford. FOURTH EDITION. Macmillan & Co.

The first edition of this work was published in 1885, its object being, as the author then said, not to present a summary, much less a complete account of constitutional law, but to deal only with two or three guiding principles which pervade the modern constitution of England, and so to form an introduction to the study of the law of the constitution. Probably it is this restriction of the scope of the work which has given it its popularity and has led to the appearance of a fourth edition within so short a time. A formal treatise on the details of constitutional law appeals to comparatively few. A treatise on the principles which underlie the constitution, when those principles are expounded with such practical sagacity and wealth of illustration as Professor Dicey brings to the task, is assured of a larger circle of readers and a greater sphere of usefulness. The recognition of the real principles of the English constitution is, of course, a matter of comparatively recent origin, and this is carried out here with greater thoroughness than has before been attempted. The work occupies a foremost place, too, in respect of its continual comparison of our own constitution with the constitutions of other countries. These remarks apply especially to the first part of the book, which deals with the sovereignty of Parliament, and which, we hope, now replaces for the student the theorizing of Austin on the nature of sovereignty. The only change in the present edition seems to be the introduction into the appendix of Note III. on the distinction between a "Parliamentary executive" and a "non-Parliamentary executive." The distinction, as Professor Dicey says, affords a new principle for the classification of constitutions, and brings into light new points of affinity and difference. Thus, if the character of politics be tested by the nature of their executives, the constitutions of England, of Belgium, of Italy, and of the French Republic all belong to the same class, for under each there exists a Parliamentary executive; that is, an executive which is appointed by, and is dependent upon, the legislative body. On the other hand, the United States and the German Empire have at least one feature in common in that they each possess a non-parliamentary executive. The practical consequences of this difference in the position of the executive is worked out in considerable detail, and the whole note is well worth perusal.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT IN WORKS OF LITERATURE AND ART, INCLUDING THAT OF THE DRAMA, MUSIC, ENGRAVING, SCULPTURE, PAINTING, PHOTOGRAPHY, AND DESIGNS. TOGETHER WITH INTERNATIONAL AND FOREIGN COPYRIGHT, WITH THE STATUTES RELATING THERETO, AND REFERENCES TO THE ENGLISH AND AMERICAN DECISIONS. By WALTER ARTHUR COPINGER, Barrister-at-Law, Professor of Law in the Victoria University. THIRD EDITION. Stevens & Haynes.

This work has considerably increased in size since the publication of the last edition in 1881, and this is readily accounted for by the quantity of new matter which has accumulated in the interval. At the same time, we imagine that the author might have done something to save the reader this additional burden had he chosen to sacrifice unnecessary details and lengthy quotations. An example of a case stated at what seems to be inordinately length will be found at page 11, where Prince Albert v. Strange occupies some six pages, and of a quotation that might well be spared at page 931, where Hansard has been laid under contribution to enable the reader to know, on Mr. Serjeant Talfourd's authority, what reward is justly due to an author. These things are doubtless very interesting and in their way useful, but they are just the excrecences which the author of a legal work may be expected to pare off as he finds the bulk of his book steadily increasing owing to the addition of matters of more practical importance. Still, this is primarily a question for the author, and the reader, if he gets somewhat more than he wants, may be contented that the law is stated in such a manner as to suit his requirements. The new matter in the present edition includes, besides the recent cases, the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, so far as it relates to designs, the Berne Convention, and the American Copyright Act of 1891, of which items the last two have greatly increased the importance of international copyright. Accordingly this subject, and that of copyright in foreign countries, which were made a feature of the last edition, are now very fully treated, and details are given of the law in a number of additional countries. We are the more ready, indeed, to forgive the tendency to prolixity which the author displays in some parts of his work, since it appears to be but a symptom of the thoroughness which pervades the work as a whole, and makes it a complete and reliable guide to the whole law of copyright.

COPYHOLDS.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF COPYHOLDS AND CUSTOMARY TENURES OF LAND. WITH AN APPENDIX CONTAINING THE COPYHOLDS ACTS OF 1832, 1858, 1887; THE PRINCIPAL FORMS USED BY THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE, PRECEDENTS OF ASSURANCES; AND FORMS. SECOND EDITION, Revised and Enlarged. By CHARLES I. ELTON, Q.C., and HERBERT J. H. MACKAY, Barrister-at-Law, LL.B. Wildy & Sons.

In the present edition of a work the value and accuracy of the former edition of which we have tested by several years' use in practice, there have necessarily, owing to the forty or more statutes passed since 1874 affecting copyholds, been considerable alterations; and, apart from this, there has been a good deal of rearrangement of matter. One naturally turned to the exposition of the effect of the repeal of section 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, by section 45 of the Copyhold Act, 1887; but as to this we were disappointed to find nothing more than a bare statement of the effect of the sections, with a reference in the footnote to Re Hughes (W. N., 1884, p. 53) and Re Mills' Trusts (37 Ch. D. 312, 40 Ch. D. 14). We should have been glad to have had the authors' view as to the question put by Lindley, L.J., in the last-named case (p. 18): "Does the 30th section of the Act of 1881 apply to copyholds at all? There are no words providing for a fine." The effect of the Settled Land Acts and of the Lunacy Act, 1890, as to copyholds is very clearly stated. The chief alterations, however, are in the chapter relating to enfranchisement, owing to the provisions of the Copyhold Act, 1887, and these are excellently well interwoven with the previous provisions. The decisions which have occurred since the last edition for which we have looked we have found very accurately stated, and we are glad to observe that the table of cases contains references to all the series of reports. The index is very much improved in point of fulness.

HERSCHELL, C.

At the Westminster Police Court, last week, William Moore, stated to be a solicitor, and formerly managing clerk to the late town clerk of Leeds, was charged on remand before Mr. de Rutsen with stealing umbrellas from committee rooms of the House of Commons. There was a further charge against the prisoner of stealing valuable law books from the library of the Incorporated Law Society in Chancery-lane. Mr. C. O. Humphreys, on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society, said there was no doubt that the prisoner was well acquainted with the value of law books. About eighteen or twenty books had been missed from the library, but no suspicion attached to the prisoner, who had been frequently there, until one day when the librarian, whilst taking a walk, saw in a shop window several volumes which he recognised as belonging to the library. Inquiries resulted in the discovery that they had been purchased from the prisoner. A rubber stamp mark on the title-page had been erased. At the prisoner's lodgings some fine glasspaper was found, which Mr. Humphreys suggested had been used to erase the stamp. The prisoner, who denied stealing the books, and said he purchased them from another party, was committed for trial on both charges.

CASES OF THE WEEK.

Court of Appeal.

Re AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN BATER AND ANOTHER AND THE MAYOR, &amp;c., OF BIRKENHEAD—No. 1, 30th May.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT—UNBOUND MEAT—SEIZURE—REFUSAL OF MAGISTRATE TO CONDEMN—“FULL COMPENSATION”—COSTS OF APPEARING BEFORE MAGISTRATE—PUBLIC HEALTH ACT, 1875 (38 & 39 VICT. C. 55), ss. 116, 117, 308.

Appeal from the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division upon a special case stated under section 7 of the Arbitration Act, 1889 (see ante, p. 425). On the 23rd of August, 1892, the inspector of nuisances appointed by the corporation of Birkenhead seized the carcase of a bullock belonging to Messrs. Bater & Williamson, who were cattle importers and meat salesmen at Birkenhead, under section 116 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as unfit for human food. He detained the carcase, and on the 24th of August it was taken before a justice, when Messrs. Bater & Williamson, though not summoned, attended with witnesses, and the justice, after hearing the evidence, refused to condemn the carcase or make any order in respect thereof. Messrs. Bater & Williamson then claimed compensation under section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and arbitrators were appointed under section 179. The question for the court was whether the costs of appearing before the justice and opposing the application for the condemnation of the meat could lawfully be included under the word “compensation” in section 308, so as to entitle the claimants to recover them, in which case the corporation were to pay the sum of £29 18s. 6d. in addition to damages for the detention of the carcase. Section 308 provides that “where any person sustains any damage, by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of this Act, in relation to any matter as to which he is not himself in default, full compensation shall be made to such person by the local authority exercising such powers.” The Divisional Court held that the claimants were entitled to recover these costs. The corporation appealed. It was contended on behalf of the corporation that, as the claimants were not summoned before the justice, they appeared voluntarily, and they could not recover their costs, either by order of the justice or upon this arbitration. White v. Redfern (5 Q. B. D. 15) and Waye v. Thompson (33 W. R. 733, 15 Q. B. D. 342) were referred to.

THE COURT (LORD ESHER, M.R., and BOWEN and KAY, L.JJ.) dismissed the appeal.

LORD ESHER, M.R., said that section 308 must be read in its ordinary and grammatical sense. It said that where any person sustained any damage by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of the Act, full compensation should be made. What was the ordinary meaning of those phrases? It seemed to him that the words “any damage” must include anything which the person suffered by reason of the exercise of the powers, and then that person was to receive “full compensation” for that damage. It was reasonable and natural for a person, whose property was attacked, to defend it, and to call witnesses to show that he was not in the wrong, and, if that were so, the expense of so doing must be part of the damage he suffered by reason of the exercise of the powers of the Act. These expenses were, therefore, part of the ordinary damage sustained. It was sought to call them costs in the strict sense of the term, and to insist upon that ground that they were not recoverable. They were not costs in the sense of costs which could be taxed. They were expenses in the ordinary sense, and the claimants were entitled to be paid back the expenses to which they had been put by the act of the corporation. They were therefore entitled to this compensation.

BOWEN and KAY, L.JJ., concurred.—COUNSEL, J. Walton, Q.C., and W. F. Taylor; Poland, Q.C., and Marnochan. SOLICITORS, Tenn & Co., for A. Gill, Town Clerk, Birkenhead; Hamlin, Grammer, & Hamlin, for R. B. Moore & Son, Birkenhead.

BROWNE v. HART—Stirling, J., 30th May.

LIBEL—COPYRIGHT—INTERIM INJUNCTION.

This action was brought by Mr. Lennox Browns against Mr. Hart, the editor of the British Medical Journal, and claimed an injunction to restrain the defendant from falsely stating that certain articles now in course of publication in the British Medical Journal, under the title of “Inquiry into the Sanitary Condition of London Theatres” were the result of independent inquiries and original research made by or on behalf of the defendant, or of the said journal, or that such acts were the original composition of any persons employed by or on behalf of the defendant or the said journal, and from publishing without the authority and permission of the plaintiff a certain paper read by the plaintiff on the 12th August, 1891, before the Seventh Section of the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, under the title of “The Sanitation of Theatres” in its original form, or with such alterations as to make it only colourably different therefrom, and from stating and representing to the public that the plaintiff did not make such careful and detailed examination of the principal London theatres as in the said paper read by him as aforesaid the plaintiff stated he had made, and from appropriating to his own use or for the purposes of the said journal, the plaintiff's said paper, with or without colourable alterations therein. An article was commenced in the British Medical Journal of March 25th, 1893, under the heading of "Inquiry into the Sanitary Condition of London Theatres (by our Special Commissioner)," in which it was stated that hitherto no systematic inspection of theatres had been undertaken to discover what the sanitary conditions really were with a view to having them remedied. A motion was made by the plaintiff for an interim injunction in the terms of the injunction claimed in the action. In his affidavit the plaintiff stated that he had, on 12th August, 1891, read a paper before the Seventh International Congress of Hygiene at Burlington House, on "The Sanitation of Theatres," and that, from April to July, 1891, he had made careful systematic and exhaustive inspections of a number of the principal London and provincial theatres with a view specially to the preparation of the said paper, and he further alleged that the article in the defendant's journal was founded upon his paper, and that portions of it had been substantially taken from the said paper without any acknowledgment or reference thereto, as shown by the excerpts from the said article and paper, which he submitted in confirmation of his allegation. On the hearing of the motion, the claim, on the ground of copyright in the paper upon which the plaintiff had originally based his right to relief, was abandoned, and it was contended on his behalf that the statement in the article above mentioned was libellous. The defendant, in his affidavit, stated that the article complained of had been written at his request by Dr. Allan, Medical Officer of Health for the Strand District, and he denied that any part of the plaintiff's paper had been used by him or by any other person with his knowledge or authority for the purposes of the said article. Dr. Allan also made an affidavit in which he denied that he had taken any expressions or ideas from the plaintiff's paper, and stated that his article in the British Medical Journal was entirely the result of his own personal investigations. Under these circumstances it was contended, on behalf of the defendant, that he was in no way to blame in the matter. He was, however, quite willing to state in the British Medical Journal that previously to the article complained of the plaintiff had made a systematic inspection of theatres.

STIRLING, J., said it appeared to him that the case was not one which called for the interference of the court at the present stage. The question was whether the defendant had libelled the plaintiff; but there being no direct reference to the plaintiff in the article complained of, his lordship could not come to the conclusion that a jury would inevitably find that there was a libel. There would be no order on the motion, except that the costs should be costs in the action.—COUNSEL, Hastings, Q.C., and A. à B. Terrell; Buckley, Q.C., and Leverton. SOLICITORS, *B. H. APLIN (Appellant); PORRITT AND OTHERS (Respondents)—31st May.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS—RABBIT COURSEING—"DOMESTIC ANIMAL"—12 & 13 VICT. C. 92, ss. 2, 29.

This was a special case stated by justices for the county of Northumberland. The respondents were charged under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, s. 2, on the information of the appellant, who was an inspector of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, with having unlawfully caused to be cruelly ill-treated, abused, and tortured a number of rabbits. The facts of the case were that on Monday, the 14th of November, 1892, the respondents with a number of other persons assembled in a field and took part in coursing with dogs certain rabbits. The rabbits were wild rabbits which had been caught in nets and confined in boxes, and had come into the possession of the respondents five or six days before the day of the coursing, and had been fed by the respondents while in their possession. On the day when the coursing took place the rabbits were taken one by one out of the boxes and were liberated in the field, and were then chased or coursed by the dogs. None of the rabbits escaped, and after having been bitten and worried by the dogs, were thrown on one side, and in many instances were left in a mutilated and worried condition. The justices held that the respondents did cause the rabbits to be cruelly ill-treated, abused, and tortured, but were of opinion that the rabbits were not domestic animals within the meaning of the Act, and the justices therefore dismissed the information. By section 29 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92 the word "animal" shall be taken to mean any horse, mare, gelding, bull, ox, cow, heifer, steer, calf, mule, ass, sheep, lamb, hog, pig, sow, goat, dog, cat, or any other domestic animal, and by section 3 of the amending Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 60, the word animal shall mean any domestic animal, whether of the kind or species enumerated in the aforesaid section, or of any other kind or species whatever, and whether quadruped or not. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the rabbits were at the time of the offence no longer wild animals, but that, having been reclaimed from their original state of freedom and brought under the control of man, they had become domestic animals. Reliance was placed on the case of Colam v. Pagett, 12 Q. B. D. 60, in which it was held that linnets caught by a birdcatcher and used by him as decoy birds were domestic animals. The respondent did not appear.

THE COURT (MATHEW and WRIGHT, JJ.) were of opinion that the decision of the justices was right, that the rabbits were not domestic animals within the Act, and that there was no distinction between their case and that of a bagged fox or caged rats. Appeal dismissed.—COUNSEL, Smyly, Q.C., and Colam. SOLICITOR, A. Leslie.

MAXIM NORDENFELDT GUN, &c., CO. (LIM.) v. NORDENFELDT—North, J., 18th May.

PRACTICE—INQUIRY AS TO DAMAGES—PARTICULARS OF DAMAGES CLAIMED.

Under an order of the Court of Appeal of the 19th of November, 1892, an injunction was granted restraining the defendant in this action from carrying on the business of a manufacturer of guns, &c., in breach of his covenant with the plaintiff company, and an inquiry was directed to assess the damages sustained by the plaintiff company by reason of such breach by the defendant. The defendant giving an undertaking as to damages, the injunction was stayed for two months. On summons to proceed with the inquiry, on February 15, 1893, an order was made in chambers that the inquiry should stand over until the plaintiff company had obtained discovery, and on February 24 an order was made that the defendant should make an affidavit of documents relating to the matters in question in the inquiry. On the 24th of April North, J., made an order in chambers that the plaintiff company should within two months give particulars of the damages claimed, and that the defendant's time for putting in his affidavit of document of documents should be extended to a fortnight after such particulars were delivered. On motion to discharge this order,

NORTH, J., held that the defendant was not entitled to particulars in the strictly technical sense, and that the order must therefore be discharged; but that the plaintiff company must deliver within two months to the defendant a statement in writing of the heads of claim under which they sought damages against the defendant, and that the defendant's time for making his affidavit of documents must be extended to fourteen days thereafter.—COUNSEL, Coxens-Hardy, Q.C., and *W. GOODIER v. EDMUNDS—Stirling, J., 19th May.

WILL—CONSTRUCTION—TRUST FOR SALE—RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES—CONVERSION.

This was a summons to decide the question whether the beneficiaries under the will of the testator, Jacob Goodier, took the interests thereby conferred on them as realty or personality. The testator by his will, dated the 22nd of November, 1837, devised to trustees his real estate upon certain trusts during the lives of his son William, the widow of William, and his daughter Mary; and from and after the death of the longest liver of William, his widow, and Mary upon trust after the decease of such longest liver to sell; and as to the money to arise from such sale and the rents and profits to arise until sale to divide the same between a class consisting (as was held by the Court of Appeal in Goodier v. Johnson, 30 W. R. 449, 18 Ch. D. 441) of the children of William and Mary subject to provisions divesting the shares in certain events. It was held that the gift in favour of the children of William and Mary was not void for remoteness. Since that decision the last survivor of the three had died. The real estate had been sold under orders of the court, and the proceeds were about to be divided. In the interval between the death of the testator and that of the last survivor one of the children had died: his real and personal estate went in different directions, and the question arose whether his share in the proceeds of the sale was to be regarded as realty or as personality.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, and considering the observations of Jessel, M.R., in Goodier v. Johnson, said that the rule against perpetuities, as was shown by the case of London and South-Western Railway Co. v. Gomm (30 W. R. 321, and, on appeal, 620; 20 Ch. D. 562) prohibited the creation of estates or interests (whether legal or equitable) which might arise until after the period defined by the rule. It was rightly admitted in argument that if, in the present case, there had been a power instead of a trust for sale, that power would have been invalid. There was, however, no substantial difference, for the purposes of the rule against perpetuities, between a trust for sale and a power of sale, where the sale was intended to be completed by a conveyance to the purchaser of the legal estate vested in the trustees. A testator or settlor could not, in his lordship's opinion, impose any obligation to sell where he could not lawfully confer a power to do so, or escape from the rule against perpetuities by vesting in his trustees an imperative, instead of a discretionary, power of sale. Therefore his lordship came to the conclusion that the trust for sale was bad. In the present case he should have thought that, even in the absence of the trust of the rents and profits until sale, the beneficiaries ought to be held entitled, but that the beneficial interests would devolve as real estate; for he apprehended that nothing short of an absolute trust for sale could in equity create a conversion of realty into personality: see Hyett v. Mekin (32 W. R. 513, 25 Ch. D. 235). In the present case the trust for sale was void; but there could be no doubt that the interests of the beneficiaries did not fail, and his lordship held that the real, and not the personal, representatives of the deceased child were entitled to his share of the proceeds. He added that the preceding observations were not intended to apply to a case where the trust or power of sale was preceded by limitation of an estate tail. There considerations of a different kind were to be taken into account: see Heasman v. Peares (30 W. R. 271, L. R. 7 Ch. 275, at pp. 282, 283).—COUNSEL, Hastings, Q.C., and De Morgan; Buckley, Q.C., and Yardley; B. B. Rogers, Whitaker, and Macnaghten. ## Solicitors' Cases.

Re R. A. STUART—Q. B. Div., 19th May.

SOLICITOR AND CLIENT—AGREEMENT AS TO CHARGES—REASONABLENESS—APPLICATION TO SET ASIDE AGREEMENT—POWER OF COURT TO VARY—SOLICITORS ACT, 1870 (33 &amp; 34 VICT. c. 28) ss. 4, 8, 9.

This was an appeal from an order of Mathew, J., in chambers, setting aside an agreement made between a solicitor and his client, Mrs. Cathcart, as to the amount of remuneration which the solicitor was to receive for attending the taxation of a bill of costs on her behalf. The costs had been incurred in proceedings in lunacy by which Mrs. Cathcart's husband sought to have her declared insane. In this he failed, but Mrs. Cathcart had to pay her own costs, and two-thirds of her husband's costs were to come out of a fund in which she was interested. Before the bill had been delivered Mrs. Cathcart insisted on an agreement being made by Mr. Stuart, her solicitor, in these terms:—"Cathcart v. Cathcart.—Dear Sir,—I agree to pay you 5 per cent. on all costs taxed off Messrs. Crawley & Co.'s bill in the above action. In case there should be no taxation till the appeal to the House of Lords I agree to pay you £10 (ten pounds).—MARY CATHCART. I agree to the above.—R. A. STUART." When the bill was delivered it amounted to a sum of about £5,000. The solicitor attended at the taxation, and nearly £2,000 was taxed off. Part of the costs charged in the bill consisted of refresher fees of fifty guineas a day for fourteen days to the husband's counsel: these were taxed down to the maximum for refresher fees allowed by the rules—ten guineas a day. The solicitor claimed his percentage according to the agreement upon the whole amount taxed off. The master, upon an application made to him by the solicitor under section 4 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870, held that the agreement was fair and reasonable. Mrs. Cathcart then applied, under section 8, to the judge in chambers, to set aside the agreement, and Mathew, J., made the order appealed from. By section 4 of the Solicitors Act, 1870, a solicitor may make an agreement in writing with his client respecting the amount and manner of payment for his services at the same or at a greater or a less rate as or than the rate at which he would otherwise be entitled to be remunerated; provided that where such agreement is made with respect to business done in an action, the amount payable under it shall not be received until the agreement has been allowed and examined by a taxing officer: if the agreement does not appear to the taxing officer to be fair and reasonable, he may require the opinion of the court to be taken thereon, and the court may either "reduce the amount payable under the agreement, or order the agreement to be cancelled." Section 8 provides that "every question respecting the validity or effect of any such agreement may be examined and determined, and the agreement may be enforced or set aside without suit or action on motion or petition" of any of the parties thereto, and by section 9 if the terms of the agreement shall not be deemed by the court to be fair and reasonable "the same may be declared void, and the court or judge shall thereupon have power to order such agreement to be given up to be cancelled." It was argued for Mrs. Cathcart that the agreement was unreasonable, because the costs must necessarily have been largely reduced on taxation without the interference of a solicitor at all, by virtue of the rule which fixed the maximum refresher fee at ten guineas, and that this ought to have been present to the solicitor's mind when the agreement was entered into. The solicitor offered to give up his percentage on the amount taxed off in respect of refresher fees, but he contended that the decision of the master made the matter a res judicata; that there was nothing unreasonable in the agreement; and that if the court decided against him he was worse off by reason of having obtained the master's approval than if he had not done so.

THE COURT (WILLS AND CHARLES, JJ.) dismissed the appeal.

WILLS, J., thought there were circumstances which made it dangerous to hold that such an agreement was fair and reasonable within the section. He did not think that Mr. Stuart had any other thoughts than those of honesty and honour when he accepted the agreement forced on him by the lady. But she was his client, and he ought to have had it present to his mind and to have informed her that there was a probability, from the eminence of the counsel employed, of very much larger fees being in the bill than could be allowed against her. The only ground of objection against this agreement was the refresher fees. If section 9 had allowed an alteration or reduction to be made, the percentage on the sum from the refreshers might have been taken off. But the section only allowed the enforcement or the annulling of the whole agreement. Therefore, this could not be.

CHARLES, J., agreed, and remarked that the jurisdiction of the court under sections 8 and 9 was quite distinct from that which the court would have if a question were referred to them from the master under section 4. Appeal dismissed.—COUNSEL, Jelf, Q.C., and Stephen Lynch; Bigham, Q.C., and Other. SOLICITORS, R. A. Stuart; Fenton.

Re A SOLICITOR; Ex parte THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY—Q. B. Div., 18th May.

SOLICITORS—APPLICATION TO STRIKE OFF ROLLS—CONVICTION OF SOLICITOR FOR KNOWINGLY ALLOWING A HOUSE TO BE USED AS A DISORDERLY HOUSE—JURISDICTION OF COURT TO STRIKE OFF ROLLS.

Application on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society to strike a solicitor off the rolls. The solicitor, Mr. George Edward Weare, of Bristol, had been summoned for that he, being the landlord of a certain house, No. 4, Harford-street, Bristol, was a party to its being used as a disorderly house. This charge was heard before the magistrates in the Police Court, Bristol, and the magistrates, after fully hearing the evidence, held that the charge was proved, being of opinion that the house had been used as a disorderly house many times during the preceding six months, and that Mr. Weare was a wilful party to its continued use as such, and they convicted Mr. Weare and sentenced him to three months imprisonment with hard labour. The conviction was under section 13 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, which says that the landlord of any premises who "is wilfully a party to the continued use of such premises or any part thereof as a brothel," shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £20, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour. On appeal to quarter sessions by Mr. Weare, the conviction was affirmed by the recorder, but the sentence was reduced to a fine of £20. In giving judgment the recorder said:—"This is an appeal from a conviction of George Edward Weare by justices of this city to these quarter sessions, whereby it was adjudged that Weare, being the landlord of certain premises known as 4, Harford-street, was a party to the continued use of such premises as a disorderly house. The conviction is in the words of a part of section 13 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885. It is necessary for the prosecution in order to sustain this conviction to prove that Weare had knowledge of the premises being used for a disorderly purpose, had power to put an end to the tenancy, and, having such knowledge, was a party to the continuance of such use. It has been proved that the tenancy was a weekly one, and it has been proved that he allowed the tenancy to continue. It was proved that No. 4 was used as a disorderly house during the time in question, and the sole remaining question therefore is whether Weare knew, when he thus allowed the tenancy to continue, that it was so used." The learned recorder, after going through the evidence, held that Weare knew that the premises were so used, and he affirmed the conviction. An application was now made to strike the solicitor off the rolls.

WILLS, J.—This is a case of very great public importance, as well as of great importance to the person more immediately concerned, but neither my learned brother nor myself entertain any doubt at all what our judgment ought to be. I quite agree with Mr. Coleridge that the mere fact of a man being convicted of a criminal offence, even an offence punishable with imprisonment and hard labour, is not in itself sufficient to justify his being struck off the rolls, or being even suspended from practice, because there may be cases in which, although the law has to be vindicated, there may be nothing when the matter comes to be explained which would seriously detract from the confidence which, in all the ordinary relations of life, and in the ordinary business relations which a solicitor must maintain with his clients, ought to be placed in him. But at the same time when a man has been convicted of a criminal offence, and that matter is brought to the notice of the High Court of Justice, it certainly raises a prima facie case which calls for explanation and for a satisfactory explanation on the part of the solicitor; and, to some extent at all events, it throws the onus on him of getting rid of what, under the circumstances of each particular case, would be the natural inference that one would draw from such conviction. Therefore a convicted man does not by any means stand in the same position as a man who has not been convicted of an offence. The analogy which Mr. Coleridge put, of a man who had been guilty of disgraceful conduct in the relations of life which brought him within the jurisdiction of the Divorce Court, is, to my mind, a false one. In that case the man has not been convicted of any offence against the criminal law of the country, and the prima facie inference to be drawn from that, that there is a case for investigation in this court, does not necessarily arise. Nobody can deal exhaustively with a case of this kind (and I am anxious to say nothing which can limit the proper area of jurisdiction of this court), but there might be cases come out, even in an investigation in the Divorce Court, which would shew that a man was wholly unfit to be a member of an honourable profession, or be entrusted with the status of one of the officers of this court. But, dropping generalities, it is better to come to the circumstances in this case, and I have only made these introductory observations in order to show that I, at all events, entertain no doubt whatever as to our jurisdiction in this matter, and as to its being properly invoked in a case of this kind. Now what is it that this solicitor has been convicted of? He has been convicted of knowingly permitting premises, which belong to him, to be used for the purpose of brothel keeping. Prima facie most of us would say that that was a very disgraceful kind of offence, that it was one which not merely involved simply immorality, but that it involved something that it was personally disgraceful in the highest degree to the individual convicted of such an offence. It is said that he was not taking extra rent for these premises because they were used as a brothel. I cannot see that that really affects it, the degree of the profit which he got out of this letting. The learned recorder has found, and found, as it seems to me, upon ample evidence, that the respondent knew at the time when he let the premises to this man that he had kept a brothel, and I agree in the learned recorder's inference from that that he must have known, if he had chosen to think about it at all, that he was very likely to keep a brothel again. He was himself from time to time in the street and going into these houses collecting the rents, and he was a person who had had ample warning, because some years ago he had been proceeded against unsuccessfully for something of the same kind. Therefore he was a person who knew perfectly well what the conditions, if I may so phrase it, of the game which he was playing were, and what were the risks involved, and to suppose for a moment that a man of his class, of his experience, and of his profession, would not know perfectly well what was going on when these scenes are described which took place in his presence in the street, and still more when he went into the house to collect the rents, would be a stretch of charity which would degenerate into absurd and ridiculous weakness. Upon this point let me add this, that the learned recorder has, I think, upon very good ground, disbelieved the statement which this respondent made upon oath as to what had taken place within his observation, and as to what he knew. Upon that matter he seems to have been contradicted by at least three witnesses. Now, is such a person fit to remain an officer of this court? Is he a person to be entrusted with the delicate, the honourable, and the difficult duties which a solicitor has to discharge, and which he cannot adequately discharge if he is a person of limited education and reputation, and if he is affected with a conviction of, to my mind, a peculiarly disgraceful character, because this trafficking in prostitution, this investing of money in a business of this kind, which is what it practically comes to when a man lets his house to a brothel keeper and knowingly continues him as a tenant when he might turn him out every week, is what most people would feel to be conduct of a peculiarly disgraceful kind, something which the instincts of every gentleman and of every member of an honourable profession ought to revolt against, and in my judgment such a person is not fit to be trusted by this court with the privileges and the status which belong to a solicitor. It seems to me that, granted that this court must interfere at all in such a case as that, there can be no half-way house, there can be no halting place between non-interference and interference in the most complete and effectual sense; and it seems to me that it would be almost an insult to the body of honourable men who are represented by the Incorporated Law Society, to allow a man tainted with such a conviction as this is, under such circumstances as the learned recorder has summarized in his judgment, to remain an officer of this court; and, therefore, I think he ought to be struck off the rolls.

CHARLES, J.—I am of the same opinion, and I do not mean to add anything except that I concur both in the expression by my learned brother of the principles which ought to guide us in exercising this jurisdiction, and also in the view he has taken of the facts in this particular case.

The order of the court was that George Edward Weare, solicitor, of Bristol, be struck off the rolls.—COUNSEL, Hollans; Hon. B. Coleridge, Q.C., and Weatherley. SOLICITORS, E. W. Williamson; Riddale & Son, for Gregory & Hirst, Bristol.

THE PRACTICAL WORKING OF THE LAND TRANSFER BILL.

THE following are extracts from the pamphlet issued by the Council of the Incorporated Law Society to which we referred last week:—

Compulsory registration with a possessory title will be found of little or no present use, because, as has been pointed out, it will not for many years do away with the necessity for an investigation into the earlier title. Consequently, a proprietor who has been registered as proprietor of land with a possessory title will, on attempting to sell, be probably told by an intending purchaser that he must obtain an absolute title, which, in the case of a very large number of titles, will be found either impossible or very costly. As illustrations the following instances (all subsequent to 1889) are given from the practice of one London solicitor:—

(1) LONDON.—Freehold property, purchased in January, 1893, for £35,000.—The title, which had been accepted by mortgagees of the vendor, was carefully examined and approved on behalf of the purchaser. He wished to register his title, but, thinking he would gain no advantage by having a possessory title, he applied for an absolute title, and was informed that he had better withdraw his application, as the title of a vendor (a railway company) in 1806 (twenty-seven years previously) was not sufficiently made out.

(2) ESSEX.—Freehold property which had been for many years in the owner's family.—As the title had recently been investigated and accepted by mortgagees for about £250,000, no difficulty was anticipated. The abstracts were left in July, 1891, and were returned in July, 1892, with an intimation that the title could not be satisfactorily made out.

(3) KENT.—Freehold residence.—The title had been carefully investigated on its purchase by the present owner, and afterwards independently on a mortgage by trustees. After a very great deal of trouble and delay the title was eventually passed as absolute, the time occupied being seven months, and the cost (although the owner was a solicitor and conducted the application himself) about £26 in clearing up difficulties which on the purchase and mortgage had not been deemed worth notice.

(4) DEVONSHIRE.—Freehold estate.—The title had been on more than one occasion during the preceding seven years independently examined and approved on behalf both of mortgagees and purchasers. On application for registration with an absolute title no less than fifteen months were occupied, and a cost rather exceeding £100 was incurred for the purpose of disposing of requisitions which had on previous occasions been treated as sufficiently cleared up.

It will be seen from these instances, which could be multiplied, that the statement in the "General Instructions" published by the Land Registry, that—"Where the title appears to the registrar, though not carried back for the full period, to be a good holding title, or where the title appears to him to have been duly investigated in a recent sale or mortgage, the registrar has a wide discretion given him which removes many of the difficulties and greatly facilitates registration," is somewhat misleading. Such a discretion may exist, but appears to be seldom, if ever, exercised. Nor is it easy to see how, even in the case of land registered with an absolute title, an investigation into the earlier title can be dispensed with. For the Succession Duty Act (section 42) makes the succession duty a charge on the land, whether in the hands of the successor or of anyone deriving title from him; and this liability, which is expressly kept alive by the Act of 1875, s. 18, sub-section (2), appears to make it unsafe to purchase land without satisfactory evidence (which implies examination into the previous title) that all succession duty, arising in consequence of any death within twelve years previous to the purchase (Customs and Revenue Act, 1889, s. 12), has been discharged. For since the whole duty on a succession attaches to every part of the property comprised in it, it is quite possible that, if the land have been sub-divided and sold in small lots, any one lot may be liable to an amount of succession duty exceeding the gross purchase-money! Nothing is in practice more common than for a purchaser on investigating the title to the property which he has contracted to purchase to find that there is some succession which has been overlooked and the duty on which has to be discharged. Either the liability to any such undischarged duty remains on registered land, even if the title to it be absolute, or it does not. If it does, a purchaser must, notwithstanding registration, investigate the earlier title for his own protection, in which case one of the chief benefits of registration will be lost. If it does not, the Treasury will incur considerable loss on unaccounted for successions.

Registration, whether with a possessory or absolute title, is but the beginning of inconveniences, delay, and costs, except in the most simple cases. Take the common case of a landowner who, for some temporary purpose, has occasion to borrow money from his bankers. The Act of 1875 (section 81) tells him that a deposit of his land certificate will be equivalent to a deposit of his title-deeds, and that such a deposit should be protected by a caution (section 49). Obviously such protection is necessary, for a certificate need not be produced on transfers or other dealings, and, if not forthcoming, can be replaced (section 78). So the landowner goes off to his bankers, and it will be useful to give an actual case as an illustration of the result:—A. B., a registered proprietor of freehold land with a possessory title, applied to her bankers in July, 1892, for a temporary advance of £1,500. Had the land not been registered, the loan would have been made on a simple deposit of the deeds without any written memorandum, and without costs of any kind. If the loan, though temporary, might last for six months or a year or more, a written memorandum would probably have been required, and A. B. would have had to pay:

|  |         |
|--|---------|
| Charges of bank solicitor for examination of title and memorandum of charge under hand | £2 2 0  |
| Stamps   | 0 15 0  |
| Total  | £2 17 0 |

As, however, the land was on the register, a caution was necessary. The fee for registering such a caution is the same as would have been payable if an actual charge had been made and registered—namely, £5. The caution has to be supported by an affidavit or declaration involving a fee of 1s. 6d., so that A. B. had to pay £7 18s. in all, or nearly three times as much as if she had not been a registered proprietor. In addition, when the loan is paid off, A. B., who, if not a registered proprietor, would have called at the bank and taken away her deeds without any costs or stamps, will, because she is such a proprietor, have to go or send to the Land Registry and to pay a fee of 10s. for withdrawal of the caution. On the 8th of August, 1892, an order was made that no ad valorem fee should be charged on the registration of a caution containing a proviso that it should cease to operate at the end of one year or less from the date of its registration, but this does not apply to a renewal, and a minimum fee of £1 is in every case to be paid. This order is of little use. Even if a landowner, wishing to borrow money on a deposit of his certificate, believes that the loan will be temporary only, no banker will accept a transitory caution, and, if he should do so and the loan should extend beyond the twelve months, the full ad valorem fee has to be paid in addition to the £1 already disbursed. The General Instructions issued by the Land Registry in 1893 (p. 14)* emphasize this, for, after pointing out that mortgages should be registered, and that cautions are not intended as substitutes for registration, the instructions proceed:—"In order to discourage the practice as far as possible" (that is, the practice of depositing the land certificate by way of equitable mortgage), "It is provided that a caution or restriction to protect a transaction capable of registration shall pay the same fee as the registration of the transaction itself," with an exception in favour of strictly temporary matters, limited to take effect for a year only. Many similar instances could be given, and the importance of the evidence is not only to show the cost and routine involved in all dealings with registered land, but the impossibility of inducing officials to regard the public as anything else but material from which fees are to be extracted, instead of doing their utmost, as private agents are compelled to do, to so mould the arrangements of business as to meet as far as possible the requirements of clients. The following is a copy (omitting name and address) of a letter dated the 2nd of May, 1893, written by a manager of a large joint-stock bank on this subject:—"It is a matter of most frequent occurrence, that small freeholders requiring advances come to this bank, bringing the deeds of their properties. I myself look at the deeds, and am generally able, where I know the applicants personally, to satisfy myself that their title will justify me in advancing the sums they require, which are usually taken on current accounts. I then fill up a printed form supplied by head office, which they sign, and that is the only formality. No charge beyond the usual bank charges is made, with the exception of the stamp duty, and when the advance is repaid the deeds are given up, and the document depositing them with us is destroyed. It is only in exceptional cases that I have to consult you, as solicitor to the bank, and then merely as to title, and not as to the instrument; in fact, as a rule, the costs of advances on land by the bank are not greater than those upon note of hand.

* "General Instructions as to registration and transfer of land under the Land Transfer Act, 1875, with the Act, Rules, and Orders, Fees, and a General Index." London: Her Majesty's Stationery Office, 1893.

If it became necessary that these advances, which are often for very short periods, should be secured by documents that would have to be registered, the expenses would probably prevent the transaction altogether, and a provision that loans for a short time need not be registered would not meet the difficulty, because, frequently, these loans, made originally for a short time, are extended indefinitely. With a somewhat lengthy experience, I think I may say that the practice I have mentioned is an almost universal one amongst country bankers (joint stock). The routine and difficulties inherent in the system cannot be more clearly pointed out than they are by Mr. Brickdale (the present Assistant Registrar of Titles) in his work already referred to, p. 28:—"The little business that the office has had has been conducted under such a perpetual terror of making the slightest mistake or leaving the least loophole for imposition, and, as a consequence, under such stringent safety regulations that the process of first registration costs a great deal more trouble and time than all the law expenses of a sale of the property under the usual conditions, and, what is more, when at length all that trouble has been gone through, and the bill has been paid and the property is registered, the office procedure in registered sales and mortgages and all dealings is so cumbrous as constantly to delay the proceedings beyond the limits of time expended under the old system, and in many cases to result in greater expense to the parties than they would have incurred if the estate had not been registered; most especially is this likely to happen in the case of small properties." Mr. Brickdale is, of course, speaking, in the earlier part of this extract, of registration with an absolute title, but his comments on the cost, delay, and trouble involved in subsequent dealings apply to all registered land. Moreover, in the case of an ordinary mortgage of registered land, two deeds will very frequently be required instead of one as at present. For charges for registration are required to follow a prescribed form, which only allows of the insertion of certain specified conditions as to date and mode of payment of principal, reduction of interest, and the like. If any special clause is needed, it must be embodied in a separate and unregistered deed. Such, for instance, is the usual attornment by a mortgagor who is in occupation of the mortgaged property—the authority to a solicitor who is the mortgagee, or one of several mortgagees, to act as solicitor in reference to the transaction—and the like.

A like difficulty will be found in dealing with building estates, which it is desired to protect by special covenants. The General Instructions state that, generally speaking, only negative or restrictive conditions can be registered, and that conditions involving the expenditure of money, or the doing of any work on the land, cannot be annexed to the title, but must be left to depend on personal agreements between the parties. There are two classes of covenants common on building estates—the one, negative, not to use the land in a certain manner, and the other, positive, to keep up fences and to contribute towards the repairs of roads on the estate. The burden of covenants of neither class runs at law with the land—i.e., a sub-purchaser of the plot is not liable to damages if the covenants are not performed, but he is liable to be restrained by injunction from breach of covenants of the former class, unless he purchased without notice of the covenant, an event which is barely possible, as he cannot avoid notice by neglecting to investigate the title. The performance by sub-purchasers of covenants of the latter class is usually provided for by the insertion of, in the original conveyance, a power of re-entry (restricted as to perpetuity) arising on breach. Covenants of the former class can be registered under the Act of 1875, but covenants of the latter class cannot be, and must be the subject of a separate instrument, and protected by caution or inhibition. In the case of a sale of a small part of settled lands which are affected by family charges, portions, and jointures, it is frequently the practice, in order to save expense, to declare that, as between the sold and the unsold estate, those charges shall be primarily borne by the latter, which shall form an indemnity to the purchaser, who thus saves much expense and complication. On such an indemnity being recently tendered for registration, the registrar declined to register it, as "not being an ordinary charge by way of mortgage, which alone appeared to be capable of registration under the Act." The purchaser, who was a willing buyer, had, therefore, to take a separate and unregistered charge of indemnity protected by a caution with its attendant risks.

Again, by section 34 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, a declaration by the appointor of new trustees that the land subject to the trust shall vest in the new set of trustees, is made sufficient without any conveyance or assignment; but in the case of land registered under the Act of 1875, the registrar declines to recognize this as sufficient, and requires a separate deed. The additional cost involved in this unnecessary formality can be shewn from a recent experience. The supplemental deed (which was short) cost, including stamps and disbursements, £3 2s. 6d., and, in addition, the preparation and completion of the following further instruments was necessary, none of which would have been required if the land had not been registered:—

- (1) An application to register the death of a deceased trustee.
- (2) A memorial to register the death of the trustee.
- (3) Certificate of the death to accompany.
- (4) Declaration of identity.
- (5) Application to register the conveyance.
- (6) Declaration to prove due execution.

N.B.—The grantors lived in different parts of England.

(7) Statement of estimated value of land.

The payments were as follows:—

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| Stamps on the three declarations . . . . .    | £0 7 6  |
| Fee stamps and for new certificates . . . . . | 4 12 0  |
|   | £4 19 6 |

The expense of a plan was saved by detaching the plan from the old certificate, and using it for the new one. But the whole additional cost and trouble was due to the fact that the land had been placed on the register. Some experience may be gained from the colonial system of registration. In a transaction which occurred in the practice of a member of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, the registration of new trustees of a will as proprietors of a large estate in the colony of New South Wales, made up of numerous purchases, occupied more than a year, and cost a sum exceeding £600. No doubt this was a somewhat exceptional case, but similar examples of delay and cost are stated to be not unfrequent in the Australian colonies.

Another inconvenience is this. The Land Registry will not amalgamate land held under different titles, but gives a separate number to each title, even though included in one certificate, and thus increases the fees. In the present month a registered owner of land with an absolute title wished to ascertain the exact terms in which an incumbrance had been entered on the register, the entry being later than the date of his certificate. He went to the registry, produced the certificate, and asked to see the entry. He was told that he must sign an application, and pay a fee of 5s.; but, on the official looking at his certificate, he said: "Oh, there are three titles here, so the fee will be 15s.!" The owner left his curiosity unsatisfied.

A registered owner who does not carefully complete his title, and register every charge from time to time, experiences very great difficulty and cost in subsequent dealings. The following is an example:—Land in Sussex was in 1891 submitted to a bank as security for an advance. It appeared that the land had been purchased from the trustees of the will of the registered owner for £300, apparently in ignorance or forgetfulness of the fact that it was registered land, and that neither the will nor the conveyance by the trustees had been registered. In order to make up the title a memorial of the death of the registered owner had to be prepared and completed, a memorial of the probate and evidence of the identity of the testator, a statement of title made and lodged, the will and conveyance printed, and the execution by each of the trustees proved. After a great delay, the title was completed; but the actual expenses of doing so amounted to upwards of £20, or about 10 per cent. on the value.

Some transactions, exceptional at any time, would be impossible in the case of registered land. For instance, it was recently (May, 1893) arranged to borrow £9,000 by a sub-mortgage of a family charge of greater amount secured on family estates, which stood limited to such uses as the father (who was the borrower) and the son, who was in New Zealand, should jointly appoint. It turned out on investigation that the family charge did not contain any power of sale, and that, owing to its date, no such power was implied. The intended lender required that the father and son should, by the exercise of their power of appointment, remedy this defect, and create a fresh charge with the usual modern powers. The money was required at once, and the delay involved in correspondence with New Zealand could not be faced. A short deed of appointment was prepared and telegraphed to New Zealand, with instructions that it should be engrossed and executed there, and a telegram sent by a named official that this had been done. The lender agreed to accept this and the contemporaneous execution by the father of a duplicate as sufficient, and so to complete the transaction. Such a transaction would have been impossible if the charge had been on registered land.

It will probably be pointed out that many, if not most, of these difficulties and inconveniences could be removed by rules. This is, no doubt, true, and one would have thought that, while the system was voluntary and depended on itself for its attraction, efforts would have been made by those responsible for its working to render it as economical, speedy, and convenient as possible. But this has not been the case. The Act was passed in 1875, and in the same year rules were issued which are still in force. During fourteen years of almost absolute failure, no attempt was made to improve the system or to attract business. In 1889 additional rules were issued, amending those of 1875, and with them an amended fee order. Instead, however, of reducing the fees and facilitating applications, the fees are in almost every case increased—often doubled, and much more than doubled—and the alterations are so regulated as to press with special hardship upon the smaller class of business. In Appendix A to these observations (p. 42) the two scales of 1875 and 1889 are compared item by item. If now, when the system depends on its own advantages and convenience, the officials so largely increase fees, what are they likely to do when, owing to the system being compulsory, the public are at their mercy? Moreover, the system of registration of title involves very precise and stringent rules and consequent routine and cost. For the title, whether originally absolute or only possessory, is being dealt with as an absolute title to the exclusion of the rights of everyone except the registered owner, subject only, as to land registered with a possessory title, to any claim existing at the date of first registration. How little the officials understand, or, if they understand, study the needs and convenience of the public may be curiously illustrated in another department of the work of the Land Registry. In 1891 the Land Registry took over the business of the Middlesex Registry, and proceeded to prepare rules for the conduct of that business under the altered circumstances. Ever since the institution of the Middlesex Registry in the reign of Queen Anne, the custom has been for the person registering to leave the deed and the memorial for examination by the proper official, and to have the former returned with a memorandum indorsed on it shewing that the registration had been completed. This system works well, and has never given rise to complaints. The registrar, however, desired to alter it, and proposed to issue a rule to the following effect:—"That the person on whose behalf the memorial is left should alone be responsible for its accuracy, the deed to which the memorial relates being stamped only so as to identify it with the registered memorial, and that the registration should only be effectual if and so far as the memorial correctly represents the deed." The registrar asserted that it was no part of his duty to see that the memorial was correct, and for a long time refused to give way; but on its being pointed out that the effect of his proposed rule would be to convert the Middlesex Registry into a registry of memorials and not of deeds, and that if it were put in force the labour of a search would be enormously increased, he reluctantly abandoned his attempt to revolutionize the practice, an attempt which no one with the slightest practical experience would have dreamed of making. The Middlesex Registry has now been for two years or thereabouts under the management of the Land Registry. By section 127 of the Act of 1875 land in Middlesex, if registered under the Act, is exempt from the jurisdiction of the Middlesex Registry. Landowners and dealers in land in Middlesex have therefore the choice between two registers, the one of deeds and the other of titles, one of which they must adopt. It is instructive to observe that very few indeed select the latter, notwithstanding its asserted advantages.

CHANGES IN PARTNERSHIPS.

DISSOLUTION.

FRANCIS RICHARD HALES and ALBAN CHAVASSE, solicitors (Hales & Chavasse), 7, Martin's-lane, Cannon-street, London. May 15. [Gazette, May 26.]

GENERAL.

It is proposed at the ensuing Commencement at Cambridge to confer the degree of Doctor of Law on Lord Herschell.

Lord Coleridge summoned a meeting of the Lords Justices of Appeal and the Judges of the Queen's Bench Division for Friday afternoon, at 3.30, in his Lordship's private room at the Law Courts, for the purpose of choosing the circuits for the ensuing summer assizes.

The Daily News says that if his engagements in connection with the Behring Sea Arbitration permit, Sir Charles Russell intends to make a flying visit to London in order to preside at the Grand Day Dinner at Lincoln's Inn on Tuesday next. The Attorney-General is Treasurer for the year, and the guest of the evening will be the Duke of York.

In a western justice court, says the Central Law Journal, a question arising as to certain powers of receivers, counsel in reading an authority to the court came across the words sui generis, which he translated, in all soberness, to the court as meaning that the officer so described had a right to sue generally. The judge accepted the translation as correct, until a smile among the lawyers present raised a doubt in his mind.

The Attorney-General concluded his argument on behalf of Great Britain in the Behring Sea Arbitration at noon on Wednesday, and was immediately followed by Sir Richard Webster. Sir Charles Russell said that to the number of authorities he had already cited he had only one to add—that of a distinguished English writer on international law, Mr. W. E. Hall, to whom all practising lawyers in England and America were indebted for his valuable treatise.
